Q: What's the difference between "mais ça" and "plus ça" in French? I want to know what the difference is between "mais ça" and "plus ça". I would guess the former is "and that" or "on that", and the latter is "as well as" or "plus that" - but I don't know if that's correct. If they mean the same thing, is one of them used more commonly than the other? Are there any other differences? A: The French answer is "pas de doute". But the English answer would depend on how you are using the words. If you're specifying that something is "plus" something else, then "plus ça" works fine. "Plus ça change" is an example of this. If you're saying "And that's when...", "plus ça change", "plus ça tourne", "plus ça coute", "plus ça vaut la peine", or "plus ça va" are all examples of this. And finally, if you're saying "And then...", "plus ça change", "plus ça tourne", "plus ça coute", "plus ça vaut la peine", or "plus ça va" all work. So, as a general rule, "plus ça change" will work. A: "Mais ça" and "Plus ça" can be used in different circumstances: "Mais ça" works as "plus ça change" "Mais ça" can be used when you don't have anything else, no other preposition or conjunction, you just want to introduce something: "Cette idée est une mauvaise idée" (This idea is a bad idea) "Ça" is not necessarily a bad word but it can be: "Ce cri a un air complètement idiot" (This cry has a completely idiot-like quality) "Plus ça change" can be a bit more specific, it has to express the change in order, since the difference between "mais ça" and "plus ça" is that "plus ç

Have you ever found yourself in a conversation where you were trying to figure out what to say next? You go to the bathroom to catch your breath, and then you find your friend in the bathroom with you. Now what do you do? Do you try to pretend like nothing happened? Do you say, "I was just thinking about you, and how I can't wait until I see you again"? Or do you try to keep your feelings bottled up inside and not say anything? It's funny how every single conversation you have has an effect on the other person. What they think about you might have nothing to do with you at all, but instead is completely influenced by the kind of person that you are. The words that come out of your mouth have an effect on them. It's like you put a spell on the person, and it makes them feel a certain way. When we have love for the person in front of us, we can't be bothered with their weaknesses and shortcomings. Instead, we take the time to think of something nice that we can say to them. When we say something nice, we have no intentions of putting them down, but we are thinking of them. We don't say, "I'm so bored right now, I wish you would hurry up and finish that." Instead, we say, "You know how I love your cooking. I can't wait to see what you're going to make tonight." If the person in front of you is sensitive and insecure, all you say is, "I love you" or "I love being your friend." If a person is happy, they will smile at you. They will put on their best clothes for you. They will be a little more generous. They will be more forgiving. When they are happy, you will see the smile on their face. You will see the light in their eyes. They will want to be around you because they like the way that you make them feel. When they are happy, it radiates out of them and finds its way into your soul. If a person is feeling down, they will start to sulk. They will 2d92ce491b
